AWARDED $240,000 TEAGLE FOUNDATION COLLEGE-COMMUNITY
CONNECTIONS GRANT

Funds Will Support Collaborative Programs for Underserved East Harlem Teens to Experience and Prepare for College

NEW YORK, NY - March 17, 2009 -- Union Settlement Association in East Harlem (www.unionsettlement.org) and Drew University in Madison, New Jersey (www.drew.edu) today announced that they have been awarded a $240,000 College-Community Connections grant from the Teagle Foundation (www.teagle.org). The grant will fund a continued partnership between Union Settlement and Drew University to give low-income, underserved high school and middle school students in East Harlem a vital awareness of the challenges and rewards associated with higher education.

“Many high school students in East Harlem never have an opportunity to learn first-hand all the possibilities that a college education offers them.” said David Nocenti, Executive Director of Union Settlement Association, which is one of the largest social service providers in East Harlem. “For the past two years, Union Settlement and Drew University have developed a great partnership that encourages these underserved students to seek a college education and equips them with the tools needed to accomplish that objective. I want to thank the Teagle Foundation for this generous grant, which will allow us to expand this program and continue it for another three years.”

“Drew University is committed to helping youth in East Harlem and other underserved communities overcome the obstacles they face to attending college,” said Dr. Robert Weisbuch, President of Drew University. “By helping students to become familiar with the college setting, we are sparking a lifelong love of knowledge, education and achievement, and I am very grateful that the Teagle Foundation has recognized the merits of this program and has made such a large commitment to fund it.”

“Summer College” at Drew University features classes taught by university faculty that emphasize the benefits, challenges, pressures, and opportunities of being a college student and a college graduate. Students take part in classes and seminars that introduce them to subjects and approaches they can study in college, which are often untouched in their high schools. They also participate in evening co-curricular activities, such as a performance at the New Jersey Shakespeare Theatre, a documentary film showing and discussion, or a sporting event.

With the support of the Teagle Foundation, Union Settlement and Drew University will be integrating more opportunities for cross-programming during the school year. Drew students will travel to East Harlem twice a month to tutor middle schoolers attending Union Settlement's Saturday Academy and to lead SAT and Regents test prep for high schoolers. Union Settlement students will also visit the Drew campus for events such as student plays, poetry readings or colloquiums.
